Yellow Tang, Created on Day 5

Design The yellow tang is designed with sharp spines near its tail to help protect itself against predators and to anchor it to the rocks while sleeping. The mouth is perfectly designed to eat the algae on rocks. These designs were not the results of random, chance processes; they reflect the provision and creativity of its Creator.

Features This small, thin fish is bright yellow. It has a long snout-like mouth.

Fun Facts The yellow tang is also called the Pacific tang.

During the night, its color fades. Its bright yellow color returns rapidly when the fish wakes up. The yellow tang is a popular aquarium fish and the top marine fish export from Hawaii.

Group-spawning as well as pair-spawning by territorial males has been observed with this species.

CLASS: Actinopterygii (ray-finned fishes) ORDER: Perciformes (perch-like fishes)

FAMILY: Acanthuridae (surgeonfishes and tangs) GENUS/SPECIES: Zebrasoma flavescens

Size: 3–5 in (7.6–13 cm) Depth: 7–150 ft (2.1–45 m) Diet: Browses on filamentous algae Habitat: In the reefs in the Pacific and Indian Oceans, west of Hawaii to East Africa

Parents are too busy playing on their smartphones!

By SOPHIE BORLAND

Children are having more accidents because their parents are too busy checking their mobile phones to supervise them properly, researchers warn. They blame a sharp rise in playground falls and mishaps in the home on their mothers or fathers being distracted by text messages and emails.

The number of children being admitted to hospital having fallen from playground equipment has risen by a third in the last five years, according to NHS data.

Parenting experts and doctors specializing in emergency departments believe the rise is partly fueled by the growing use of smartphones.

They also point out children are more inclined to take risks or misbehave when they know their parents' attention is diverted.

Figures from the NHS show that last year some 9,564 children were admitted to hospital having fallen from playground equipment, up from 7,232 in 2006/7. Researchers point out that this rise coincided with the increasing availability of smartphones, such as Apple's iPhone, which went on the market five years ago.

June O'Sullivan, chief executive of the London Early Years Foundation, which runs nurseries in the capital said: 'We are all guilty of being distracted by our phones. As a society, we need to start setting parameters about when it is and is not appropriate to use them.

'It is a balancing act. But parents need to be aware when their phones are having too much power over their lives and try to put them away when they are spending time with their children.

'Children crave attention and if they are not getting it from their mums and dads, they will sometimes do dangerous things to grab it.'

Dr Wally Ghurabi, medical director of the emergency department at the University of California Los Angeles medical centre, said:

'It's very well understood within the emergency-medicine community that utilizing devices - hand-held devices - while you are assigned to watch your kids -that resulting injuries could very well be because you are utilizing those tools.'

'Distractions come in many forms, of course, but with the apparent rise in smartphone use, it's important to remind parents and carers that texting, calling and surfing the net at inappropriate times can put their child at unnecessary risk of being hurt in an accident.'
