Elephant

Excerpt from Marvels of Creation: Magnificent Mammals (by Buddy and Kay Davis)

Elephant

The elephant is the largest living land mammal in the world. An elephant has large bones filled with sponge bone instead of marrow, and pads on its feet that absorb the shock from its heavy weight. Its ears are packed with blood vessels and are fanned to bring down body temperature. Its thick skin is tender, and an elephant rolls in the dust to protect it from the hot sun and insects. Elephants love water and like to bathe daily, spraying their bodies and each other with their trunks. They drink nearly 40 gallons (151 l) of water at a time and can eat as much as 500 pounds (227 kg) of vegetation, consisting of fruit, branches, grass, and other foliage.

The elephant is a gentle animal, but becomes extremely dangerous if angered. They have extraordinary power in their trunks, able to kill with a single blow. With as many as 40,000 muscles, an elephant's trunk ends in a lobe or lip that functions like a finger, allowing the elephant to pick up small objects. An elephant's tusks, used for digging and ripping bark, are actually large protruding incisor teeth that grow throughout the elephant's lifetime. Tusks do not grow back when lost.

Social animals that greet each other if they've been apart, elephants communicate by vocal sounds such as trumpeting and purring. Purring is controlled by sounds in their stomach. They usually purr when out of sight of each other, and if they stop purring, it is a sign of danger.

~BIRTHDAYS AND ANNIVERSARIES ~

(today!) May 4, Happy Anniversary! James ♥ Elsie, 2007

Works.

A man thought of a unique way to paint the roof of his A-frame house. He threw a rope over the roof and tied it in a secure knot to the bumper of his car. No doubt he also made sure the emergency brake was on so the vehicle wouldn't roll back with his weight. He then went around to the back of the house, climbed onto the roof and tied the rope tightly around his waist. Then he leaned back, impressed by his ingenuity.

A short time later his wife, not knowing what her inventive husband had done, came out of the house with car keys in hand. She got into the vehicle and drove off, pulling her husband over the roof and down the other side. The man was seriously injured. The moral of this true story is that you are only as secure as to that which you secure yourself. If you entrust yourself to the belief that good works will save you on Judgment Day or that evolution is true, it will bring about your tragic and eternal downfall.

The Bible warns that "The way of a fool is right in his own eyes..." (Proverbs 12:15). Without the power of the gospel, God's amazing grace in saving us and His wonderful Word to give us light, we would still be foolish, blind, deceived, steeped in delusional self-righteousness, utterly hopeless, and justly condemned.
