Design: Hermit Crab

Some hermit crabs have an unusual relationship with the sea anemone. The sea anemone has stinging cells that sting or even kill those sea creatures that come into contact with it; however, the hermit crab can carry sea anemones on its shell. And even when the hermit crab changes shells, the sea anemone will often transfer to the new shell. This relationship works for the benefit of both creatures. The sea anemone eats the crab's left-over food particles, and the hermit crab gains protection from predators, as well as some camouflage, from the sea anemone.

Features: A hermit crab's color varies from red to brown to purple. Some species also have stripes, dots, or other patterns.

A hermit crab has ten legs. The front two have claws on them, which the crab uses to walk. The rear pair of legs is used to grasp onto the crab's shell.

The crab's abdomen is uniquely twisted to fit snugly into its shell.

Fun Facts: As the hermit crab grows, it must leave its shell and find a larger one. It uses shells that have been abandoned by other sea creatures, hence its nickname, "robber crab."

The hermit crab's two eyes are located at the ends of short eyestalks.

~BIRTHDAYS AND ANNIVERSARIES~

May 28, Happy Birthday! Austin Yoder, 1999

Guard rail or guardrail, sometimes referred to as guide rail or railing, is a system designed to keep people or vehicles from (in most cases unintentionally) straying into dangerous or off-limits areas. A handrail is less restrictive than a guard rail and provides both support and the protective limitation of a boundary. http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Guard_rail

What is a Guardrail?

Guardrails are "a system designed to keep something from straying into dangerous or off-limit areas."

Only God knows how many thousands of miles of guardrails line our roads and interstates. Guardrails are designed with simplistic purpose. They create a small accident to protect you from a larger incident. We rarely pay attention to or think about guardrails until we need them. When we need or use them, they can save our lives.

Applied to our lives, spirituality and relationships, guardrails can help guide and protect us. In this context, Andy redefines guardrails as "a standard of behavior that becomes a matter of conscience". Most likely our biggest mistakes in life could have been avoided if we had guardrails steering us in the right direction.

The goal should never be to see "how close I can get to a guardrail without crashing". Ideally we will never get anywhere near the guardrail. We need guardrails to keep us from ever going "too far" or from moving in a dangerous direction.

THE GUARDRAIL

A Joyful 'toon by Mike Waters

Whoever keeps commandments keeps their life, but whoever shows contempt for their ways will die.
