The whelk uses its radula (a tongue-like feature with rows of teeth) to bore a hole into the shell of its prey to reach the protected flesh. The whelk uses its radula (a tongue-like feature with rows of teeth) to bore a hole into the shell of its prey to reach the protected flesh. It then sucks out the flesh.

A whelk is generally light gray to tan, often having brown and white streaks.

The thick-lipped, spiral shell has an uneven surface with many protrusions. The shell coils in a right-hand direction and has a long siphonal canal. The shape of the whelk depends on the waves that impact the creature. The whelk has a large, muscular foot with which it holds its victim.

Fun Facts: The color of the whelk depends on the foods that it eats. Whelk egg masses, resembling clumps of puffed rice, are commonly found on beaches in early summer. The whelk is one of the most common rocky-shore gastropods in temperate regions.

The Key

Back in the Old West, a number of men were upstairs in a boarding house amusing themselves with a game of cards when they heard a cry from the street below: "Fire! Fire!" The men looked at one another in disbelief. One of the windows grew orange with the flames. "Wait!" said the dealer. "Let's just finish this hand; we've got plenty of time—I have a key to the back door."

The men nodded in approval, then quickly picked up the dealt cards. Precious minutes passed. One of the men became nervous as the flames licked through the now broken window. With darting eyes and a sweat-filled brow, he asked for the key. "Coward!" muttered the dealer as he tossed across the key.

Each of them then rushed to the door and waited with bated breath as the key was placed into the lock. "It won't turn!" the man cried. "Let me have it!" said the dealer. As he tried in vain to turn the key, he whispered in horror, "It's the wrong key!"

Many foolishly think that they can wait until the last minute to get right with God, but the Bible warns, "There is a way that seems right to man, but the way thereof is the way of death."
