I Know It's There, I Can Hear It

Bats use echolocation, seeing by sound.

Bats are normally seen flying at night (they are nocturnal). So, how do bats find their dinner in the dark?

Once again, we see God's handiwork in these amazing animals. They get along just fine at night, and it isn't because of their keen eyesight. They use echolocation—seeing by sound.

Imagine you are standing at the edge of a canyon, and you shout, "Hello!" Your voice makes sound waves that bounce off the canyon walls and come back to you just an instant later.

That's what bats do, too. They make a noise out of their mouth or nose (it sounds like a chirp, a click, a squeak, or a squeal). When it hits the object, an echo comes back. By listening carefully with its sensitive ears, the bat can tell the shape and size of the tiniest insect, just by the sound of the echo.

By the way, humans can't normally hear the sounds bats make because the pitch of their "chirp" is much higher than the pitch we can hear with our ears. -Kids Answers,

Trust in the Lord –

Trust in the Lord with all your heart and lean not on your own understanding;
in all your ways acknowledge him,
and he will direct your paths.

Proverbs 3:5-6

Are you willing and able to fully trust God in all circumstances?

I seem to struggle with this on a daily basis. Although I know, without a doubt, that God can solve all my problems and that God can take bad situations and make good (even great) things come from them, I still rely on myself to solve most of my problems. Pretty stupid, isn't it?

With my business, I am often bombarded with situations that must be dealt with and with decisions that must be made. To complicate matters... what I say and do today can have long-term consequences.

I am trying to trust in God, because I know he knows best – but doing so is much easier said than done. I know I cannot just sit in my rocking chair and expect God to take care of all of my problems and decisions. I can pray about every situation and decision and I can seek God's counsel and guidance – but eventually I have to take some action.

I think the key is to live in close fellowship with God – minute by minute. I need to talk to God on a very regular basis – but most importantly I need to know without a doubt that God will ALWAYS be there for me. That is what the scripture means when it says, "Trust the Lord with all your heart..." That kind of trust does not come easy for some of us.
