The Fallen Nest

Ella sighed as she dropped her school bag on the table. What a horrible week, she thought. First I failed my science test, then I got mad at Aria and now she won't talk to me. We'll never be friends again! Just then Mom's voice drifted in from the back porch. "Ella, come look! A bird's making a nest in our yard."

Ella walked out and looked where her mom was pointing. A bird was gathering twigs on the branch of an old oak tree. "Mom, that tree's no good!" exclaimed Ella. "It's dying, isn't it? Almost all of its leaves have fallen off!" She called to the bird. "Make your nest in the apple tree!" It ignored her.

Mom laughed. "It's no use. It's made up its mind to nest there," she said. "I guess so," said Ella. She sat down on the porch steps and watched the bird finish its nest. "I still think it should have picked a different spot."

That night, the wind howled outside Ella's window, and the rain fell down in great torrents. When Ella gazed out the window the next morning, she saw the branch from the oak tree lying flat on the ground with bits of straw and twigs scattered around it. "Mom, the bird's nest fell down!" cried Ella. "Poor bird! What will it do now?"

"I'm sure it will build another one," replied

Mom.

Ella watched the bird fly around the fallen branch, twittering and chirping. Then it began to collect twigs and straw, and to Ella's surprise, flew across to the apple tree. "Well!" exclaimed Ella, "I guess it's a good thing the nest fell down before it had eggs in it. Now the bird will have a home with lots of leafy branches for protection from rain and wind."

Mom smiled. "The fallen nest must have looked like a major tragedy to the bird, but God gave it the wisdom and ability to make something good out of apparent disaster," she said. "He gives us the ability to do that, too. Things that seem like disasters can teach us important lessons and can help us learn to trust God and grow strong." --Tanya Ferdinandusz

How About You?

What is your attitude when bad things happen in your life? Do you think everything looks hopeless? Remember that God can use all situations to bring something good into your life. Sometimes, he uses what seems like disastrous circumstances to bring about good in your life.

Today's Key Verse:
 All things work together for good to those who love God. (Romans 8:28)
