Fin

Hi! My name is Fin, and I am a bottlenose dolphin. There are over 40 species of dolphins found in oceans and rivers around the world. All of these species probably came from one original created kind. The most famous dolphins are bottlenose dolphins like me. But some dolphins look very different from me; killer whales are black and white dolphins, and Amazon River dolphins are pink. In our world, after the Fall, dolphins like me find our food using echolocation. This is a complex system that sends high-pitched sound waves bouncing out into the ocean. When they hit an object, like a yummy fish, the sound waves echo back. I can tell how big the fish is, how far away it is, how fast it's going, and what direction it's headed in. It's an amazing design that requires an all-wise Creator to have made it. But that's not my only design! I have three layers of skin called the epidermis, dermis, and hypodermis, better known as blubber. This layer of blubber keeps me nice and warm while I swim. My skin also contains tiny ridges that trap little water molecules, allowing me to swim with less resistance. I use less energy and can go faster because of this design. Here are some fun dolphin facts you can share with others:

- When we sleep, only half our brain shuts down. The other half stays awake!
- We communicate with squeaks, whistles, and body movement.
- We have been known to help injured or drowning swimmers.

- We're very social mammals and can be trained to do tricks.
 - We breathe air like you do, but we breathe through the blowhole on the top of our heads.
 - Our epidermis, the outer layer of skin, is replaced every 2-3 hours!
- Size: 6-13 ft. (1.8-4 m) Weight: 330-650 lb. (150-295 kg)
Diet: Fish, squid, and crustaceans

INTEGRITY VS. CHEETOS

When I was probably about 6 years old I remember being the least sneaky of all children. One time I had hot cheetos and my dad asked me if I had eaten them before dinner so I lied and said I hadn't. It was obvious that I had in fact been eating hot cheetos as I was literally caught red-handed in my lie. Around the same time, whenever I got homework from Kumon I would hide under my desk, fill out random numbers and return to my desk having filled out the whole packet (it was checked for completion).

Thus, I know my integrity must have popped up after all of that. I think it probably became important to me when I learned that people cheated in school in around 4th or 5th grade. That's probably about when I decided that I cared more that I felt good about how I achieve success rather than that I achieve it.

I remember the first time I'd heard the word integrity was in 2nd grade, and I didn't really notice how deeply it's tied to how I define myself until around high school. Over time I will likely continue to mentally define myself through my integrity. My commitment to my values is often bolstered by a perceived lack of these values, so I may become even more dedicated to maintaining my integrity for my future role in business. Because business frequently poses many decisions that have a significant impact on core values that a person may uphold, it will be especially important that I continue to espouse this value.
